and the criminal is placed in front of a right post, on a seat made something like a stool; his legs are pinned to the sides of the post, and his arms are tied behind him; he is then placed between two iron prongs so as to fit on the back of his neck; under these are two other pieces of iron, one an inch square, a little over a foot long, and perfectly smooth; these pieces pass through the post, and are moved with great and precision along the sides of the neck. A section of a screw which passes through the plate that unites with the ends behind the neck, the screw is turned by an iron bar which is three feet long, that fits on the end of it of iron about as large round as your fist, and is attached to the outer ends. This is the apparatus; and by a turn of the screw the pieces are drawn in, pressing the neck against the throat, so as to break the neck.

instantly. Seating myself upon the stool, I began to scratch the shackles around my ankles, and to the colored gentleman to adjust them within the irons; but he respectfully declined, saying, "No good—no good." Handing me a shilling piece, we thanked him for the trouble he had taken, and left, highly gratified by our visit.

ILLIANT WHITEWASH.—Many have heard plant stove whitewash on the east end of President's house at Washington. The following is a receipt for making it, as gleaned from a National Intelligencer, with some additional comments learned by experiment :

Take half a bushel of rice unslacked (that is, with long boiling water, cover it during the process to keep it in the tanner, and add a peck of clean salt, previously well dissolved in warm water; three pounds of ground rice to a thin paste, and stirred in boiling pound of clean glue, which has been dissolved by first soaking it well, bringing it over a slow fire, in a small kettle within a large one filled with water. Add pounds of hot water to the whole mixture well, and let it stand a few days covered over with a cloth. It should be put on right before use. It can be kept in a kettle over a furnace. It is said that about one-half a barrel of it will

This mixture will cover a square yard outside of a house, if properly applied. It is more or less small may be used, according to the neatness of the job required. It is as well as oil paint for wood, brick, and is cheaper. It retains its brilliancy many years. There is nothing of the kind will compare with it, either for inside or outside work. Coloring matter may be put in, at the rate of any shade you like.

Finally pulverized common clay, with Spanish-brown, before it is stirred in the mixture, makes a lilac color.—Laminate in moderate quantities makes a slate color suitable for the outside of buildings. Laminate Spanish-brown mixed together with reddish stone color. Yellow ochre in makes a yellow wash, but clear.

...and makes a color generally esteemed better. In all these cases, the darker shade will of course be determined by the nature of coloring used. It is difficult to make a choice, because tastes are very different; it would be well to try experiments on a shingle, and elephant's keeper, who was standing near his horse. The whole menage immediately came to a halt, and some members of the company went forward to pick up the man. The elephant would not allow any person to touch the senseless form of his keeper. He stood with him up to his trunk, softly, he would lean him on his horse, but finding that the man was senseless, he held him by the hand and

That he was this but the exercise of a intelligence, in which pity and affection were all undoubtedly blended? We believe that that animal, at least, the feeling of a soul, if 'tis Reason which makes the essence of the immortal spark,—Sandwich

* LIFE AND EXPLORATIONS OF JOHN C. FREMONT.—Col. Fremont, one of the most adventurous spirits that has appeared in our time, so far as his age placed in the hands of an eminently qualified writer, has here given to the world the papers containing his own remarkable narrative. His romantic history is illustrated from scenes taken in dagger-reefs, and himself while on his great expeditions.

The total number of land warrants issued under the new law of March 1855, are 227, covering upwards of 15,000,000 acres. The number of claims received was 215,760, and the value of 1,000 warrants, covering 10,000,000 acres, is $1,000,000.
